Cunningham's All Southern Team

Georgia, Auburn and Vanderbilt Take Most Places.

The exciting ending of the football season in the SEC, the loop of Georgia, Auburn and Vanderbilt, has had its share of surprises and near-tornadoes. Here is a special article in this morning's Atlanta Journal.

The story begins in the middle of the season when the three schools were neck-deep in the most important games of the year. The Georgia Bulldogs were struggling for the conference championship, the Auburn Tigers were fighting for the national title, and the Vanderbilt Commodores were trying to keep their hopes alive.

The Georgia Bulldogs had already secured the SEC title, and were looking forward to the much-anticipated game against the Auburn Tigers. The Auburn Tigers were coming off a close win over Alabama, and were looking for a chance to avenge their loss to the Bulldogs earlier in the season.

Meanwhile, the Vanderbilt Commodores were riding high after a strong performance against Tennessee. They were looking to secure their first SEC championship in decades.

As the season came to a close, the three schools were neck-deep in the most important games of the year. The Georgia Bulldogs were struggling for the conference championship, the Auburn Tigers were fighting for the national title, and the Vanderbilt Commodores were trying to keep their hopes alive.

The Georgia Bulldogs had already secured the SEC title, and were looking forward to the much-anticipated game against the Auburn Tigers. The Auburn Tigers were coming off a close win over Alabama, and were looking for a chance to avenge their loss to the Bulldogs earlier in the season.

Meanwhile, the Vanderbilt Commodores were riding high after a strong performance against Tennessee. They were looking to secure their first SEC championship in decades.

As the season came to a close, the three schools were neck-deep in the most important games of the year. The Georgia Bulldogs were struggling for the conference championship, the Auburn Tigers were fighting for the national title, and the Vanderbilt Commodores were trying to keep their hopes alive.

The Georgia Bulldogs had already secured the SEC title, and were looking forward to the much-anticipated game against the Auburn Tigers. The Auburn Tigers were coming off a close win over Alabama, and were looking for a chance to avenge their loss to the Bulldogs earlier in the season.

Meanwhile, the Vanderbilt Commodores were riding high after a strong performance against Tennessee. They were looking to secure their first SEC championship in decades.